Which Commercial Dog Food is Best For My Dalmatian? Purine Content in Dog Food

As Dalmatian owners, we are told that one of the preventative measures we can take to reduce the incidence of our dog forming ammonium urate urinary calculi is to watch the purine content of foods we feed our dalmatians. How can we monitor the purine content of commercial dog food when the purine content is not listed on the bag? One way is to look at the list of ingredients and minimize or avoid foods with ingredients that are high in purines. Since this can be a daunting task, the Urinary Stone Committee contacted Commercial Dog Food manufacturers and asked for the purine content of their dog food. The repsonses we received are in the table below. The list of foods was gathered from an inquiry on a Dalmatian Facebook group in late 2014.

			According to our consulting Vet none of our foods are low enough in Purine concentration to feed to your Dalmatian. Since they have a genetic defect and normal commercial diets are going to be insufficient to help prevent recurrences. The only diet we have that may even come close would be Vegan dry but if you dog already has stones then I would not recommend that either. We do not have the actual levels but with her knowledge on the problem with Dalmatians she does not think our food is fit
